The Remote Area Health Corps will work to close the gap in Indigenous health outcomes by working in partnership with health services to build and strengthen the remote primary health care workforce in the Northern Territory.

The Remote Area Health Corps (RAHC) has four core principles that govern the organisation's operations. These are:

Safe and successful placements
Valuable and integrated partnerships
Responsiveness, Accountability and Integrity
Sound Financial Management

These principles are addressed at every stage and decision point to ensure that a positive outcome is always achieved with the primary focus being to attain our vision.

The RAHC mission is to identify, prepare, mobilise and support urban-based health professionals to meet the staffing needs of the Aboriginal Medical Services and Northern Territory Department of Health. RAHC is committed to continual improvement in performance and effectiveness in providing appropriate health professionals to support the primary health services of the Northern Territory.

RAHC is proud of our certification and compliance with the requirements of AS/NZS ISO 9001:2015.
